

IHA's Legacy Society

John McLaughlin and Trish Wasek's Testimonial

When I was a kid, there were always plenty of cats on my aunt's farm. The kittens were so cute but not so much the following summer. Those that made it through the winter were sick, injured, or undernourished. In those days farm income was a dear commodity and veterinary services for farm cats --to the extent considered--ranked low. Farm dogs often fared little better. But today, IHA's amazingly successful low cost spay neuter service is proof that attitudes have changed. People recognize that the most effective way of controlling overpopulation is by preventing unwanted animals from being born in the first place. We know it is a 'long haul' process to reduce animal overpopulation, both rural and urban, so Trish and I applaud your efforts and we will continue to support IHA and its mission.
